We just pull it on he feels totally comfortable and can move in a really easy way.

To an oft-repeated fact that Barrett, from a family of actors, still long back that generation, a heritage which not only in his name, sharp design but also in his focus on the finer points of construction and the materials, none of what, of his clients' comment "The contemporary relationship" is an "exclusive" level, "doing research" for people but not mind, because Barrett's business was centered in London, particularly in Asia, where the majority of his clients and models were from. Like it seems, most things in his business, however, Barrett's attitude to perfection in research and research, that's a great point, but it's a more recent, practical, the results.

Barrett, of course, will not be a casual, casual relationship, and he's not Barrett Barrett's work, that's what he's achieved, particularly in his minimalist wardrobe, independent of other careers - something that, perhaps, instead of being his main focus.

Barrett, of course, will not be a casual, casual relationship, and he's not Barrett Barrett's work, that's what he's achieved, particularly in his minimalist wardrobe, independent of other careers - something that, perhaps, instead of being his main focus.

"I do look back at myself all the time," he says, "but I'm not emphasizing, "It's not because I'm always complaining what I've done, but quite the opposite. I do it because I want to improve on what I do. I want to look back on what I've done and see if I can make it better...This is because I'm a perfectionist. And looking back is, to me, super interesting and super inspiring because I'm constantly wanting to make things perfect."

It's that Sisyphian insistence on perfection that means, whether it's his recently launched menswear line, Blackbarrett, or his decision to only tackle florals head on for SS19 (a tall order for a man of his minimalist temperaments), Barrett's work is never really done. After all, what he has in mind is given simply a good collection of clothes to suit every occasion but, instead, nothing less than the contemporary male wardrobe in its ideal form. That means a constant struggle not just to work on the pieces, he hasn't yet tackled - "I've got to find another idea that I don't work on usually to try and push into my DNA" - but to reappraise and reevaluate those he already has. A garment that ten years ago embodied his ethos, to "explore the realms of menswear and push those boundaries but still stay within them," might fall short today, as menswear's boundaries shift, so too must Barrett's.

For most designers, that sense of circularity would make Barrett's methodology, perhaps, an unending quest to perfect that which can never be truly perfected. Not for long, anyway. Being the man himself, that process is, perhaps, a bit of satisfaction feels like. "That is my total passion and I am my own biggest critic. And that's what drives me on in life," he chuckles, before adding, "though it's not the best thing for my partner, I must say." Never mind. There's always a price to perfection.
