Blue eyes
"This is a powderless look," says James. "So the skin really shows through. The eyeshadow [left] is a Make By Mitchell shade. And for the smudge of under-eye colour [previous page], I'm using a natural brush to apply. She's using L'Oréal's Skin's Liquid Liner - so it melts and blends in with the foundation. It's not a line, more of a stain."

CLOUD-SOFT SKIN

"These looks are beautifully worn-in, weathered and windswept," remarks make-up artist James Molloy on set. To prep skin and lift away any dry patches, James uses a cotton bud soaked in Ren's Radiance Ready Steady Glow Daily AHA Tonic, followed by a generous application of serum. "I'm using the new Dior Forever Glow Star Filter foundation here, which is not about covering skin, it's like a layer of gleam," says James, as he sheers it out on the back of his hand with half a pump of Dior's Forever Glow Maximiser. He also mixes the liquid highlighter with a body lotion, to give limbs a particle-free lustre. For the lips (opposite page), James swatches Morphe's Colour Pencil in Backseat Love on the back of his hand. He warms up the pigments with his finger and then applies the colour directly to the centre of the mouth. "No products are being drawn on, colour is pressed into the skin."
