Jeremy's First

Moschino designer Jeremy Scott will hold his first stand-alone men's show in Milan on Sunday and will showcase a collection, a look from which is previewed here, inspired by fashion illustrator Tony Viramontes. "Tony is a little bit of an unsung hero, because he's not a household name," Scott said. "But he had such an influence in pop culture because of his work." Time Runs Out for Revlon

• The beauty company has been struggling with a hefty pile of debt.

BY KATHY HOPKINS
Ronald Perleman couldn't shuffle fast enough in the end to save Revlon, which has filed for Chapter 11. Perleman is the majority owner of Revlon, gaining control in the mid-1900s via a hostile takeover through his company MacAndrews & Forbes. In 2003, he revealed that he'd been selling off assets — from companies to fine art — and at the beginning of this year, he offloaded his eponymous Lily brand laser museum in East Hampton, N.Y., for $84 million. This was down from the original listing price of $111 million.

The 60-year-old New York-based beauty company, whose brands include name-carrying Revlon, Elizabeth Arden and Almay, has been struggling with a hefty pile of debt listed as $3.7 billion that it spent much of 2020 negotiating, which enabled it to avoid a more formal

China Sales Contract, but Luxury Back In Demand

• Bernstein expects luxury demand to go back to an even keel and growth trajectory in China.

BY TAMMI DWANG

LONDON — China's strict COVID-19 restrictions, especially with Shanghai under a two-month lockdown, led to a 6.7 percent year-over-year decline in retail sales of consumer goods in May, to 3.25 trillion renminbi, or $486.6 billion, the National Bureau of Statistics revealed on Wednesday.

The contraction in May was better than in April, which logged an 11.1 percent dip from the prior year. In the period between January and May, China's retail sales of consumer goods were 17.7 trillion renminbi, down 1.3 percent from the same period in 2021, when the country enjoyed relatively robust growth while other economies struggled due to COVID-19 outbreaks.
